SUMMARY

With such a wide variety of common issues affecting today's turf manager the 2012 Australian Turfgrass Conference offered for the first time both an Agronomic and a Management stream within the programme. Day one saw the traditional plenary session that offered a variety of information of interest to all. Day two had groups split into either golf or sportsfield streams to look at specifics within these specialised areas. Day three saw delegates split again but this time into areas of most interest to them. Those wishing to follow the agronomic side of our industry enjoyed a number of interesting presentations on important turf science issues. The delegate, who wanted to take more business oriented sessions, joined the management stream of workshops. Throughout the week delegates were able to mix and match across all streams, to ensure they participated in the sessions that best suited their needs.

Keynote speaker Dr Frank Rossi of Cornell University proved to be a great choice. Frank delivered four talks and was highly praised both at the conference and in the follow up survey. His session content included a huge amount of information on sustainable nutrient management and non-chemical pest management programmes.

The other highly ranked speakers included ex AFL player and mental health advocate Wayne Schwass, Men's health specialist Dr John Riley, superintendents Simon Bourne and Michael Bradbery and financial expert Gerry Power.

As well as the traditional session style talks a number of workshops and forums were offered during the conference. The most popular sessions offered included Sharon Keibel, introduction to behavioural profiling workshop, Social Media 101, offering a general introduction into using smart devices and social media as an effective business tool and specialty agronomic topics included organic matter, friend or foe and Better grass for less money.

Over the course of the four days of education the Australian Turfgrass Conference hosted sessions for not only golf and sportsfield delegates, but also had specialty streams for Turf Technicians, Golf Course Architects and Town Planners and Facility General Managers.

The Australian Turfgrass Conference attracted 568 delegates who participated in the four day education component and the 7,000 square metres trade exhibition. The four days comprised of the three day education conference followed by the choice of either a workshop session on communication and effective report writing or a post conference turf tour to the Melbourne Olympic Park Precinct.

The Turf Trade Exhibition perfectly complemented the educational sessions delivered during the conference. The 7000sqm display provided the 568 delegates and 1065 visitors the opportunity to browse the products, machinery, equipment and services showcased by the 78 exhibitors and manned by 345 trade industry representatives.

The two official social events were again well received with great attendance at both the Welcome Reception and Presidents Dinner. The Presidents Dinner was held at the iconic Melbourne Cricket Ground (MCG) and the 230 guests were all interested in the turf growth lamps that were in use on the ground throughout the event.

Another important component to the conference is the opportunity it gives for groups from around the country to conduct meetings and exchange information face to face. 2012 also saw the AGCSA host the International Summit. This summit saw representatives from all over the world meet in Melbourne to discuss issues common to the golf and sportsturf industry worldwide. During breaks in the conference schedule the AGCSA was able to host and facilitate the following meetings:

- Golf Greenkeepers International Summit
- National Turf Education Working Group
- National Executive of the Sports Turf Association (STA)
- Turf Industry VIP Breakfast
- State Superintendents National Meeting
- Society of Australian Golf Course Architects (SAGCA) AGM.
- AGCSA Annual General Meeting

As always the conference was marketed through a number of mediums including; Australian Turfgrass Management Journal; Turfcraft Magazine; The Cut, association and council mail outs, direct emails, state association newsletters and the AGCSA website. A new innovation this year that was used not only to market the conference but also as an information tool during the event was our conference Iphone App. Of those surveyed 154 or 65% downloaded the app with 87% finding it a useful tool and 22 giving feedback and suggestions on using the app.

Conference proceedings have been published and are available from the AGCSA. Recordings of major sessions have been made and are available for download from the AGCSA website. Follow up articles are being published in all major Australian Turf magazines.

The 28th Australian Turfgrass Conference and Trade Exhibition was extremely successful. It was the first real opportunity to measure accurately how the global financial crisis (GFC) has affected our event as the 2008 conference was held just three months prior to the crash at the same venue. When comparing this year's event with the 2008 Melbourne conference we see that full delegate registration has fallen 15% while those attending just for a day or two has risen 10%. This is still a net fall of around 5% but given that the average drop within the conferencing sector is between 15 and 25% we have fared quite well.

My thanks to Horticulture Australia for their continued support of the Australian Turfgrass Conference.

EVALUATION OF EFFECTIVENESS – Survey Results

The online survey tool has continued to be a success. Of the 396 delegates that supplied their email address 65.6% (260) responded. Below is a sample of survey feedback with detailed results attached at the rear of this report.

Please add your comment on any of the speakers and/or topics covered at this conference?
Dr Frank Rossi was great to listen to with his different approach to managing turf and he is good at delivering his message. Wayne Schwass and Sharon Kaibel were very good in helping to understand ourselves and those around us more and showed how to relate to others in different ways. There was a good mix of technical information and personal development information that made me think about work and personal matters more than in recent years after the conference. Each day of the week was equally as good as any other day and the AGCSA are to be commended for their efforts in this conference...
The combination of mens health, personal financial security, behavioural session with the very good agronomic and turf presentations were an excellent balance. The best I have been to, enjoyed all sessions.
Michael Bradbery's presentation on the epic encounters of the Manly Golf Club re-development, I believe is really 'the nuts & bolts' if you like of what we are all about as Course Managers/Superintendent's. This presentation encapsulated it perfectly.
I found the speakers and topics very interesting and entertaining (10)
Dr Frank Rossi's presentations were the best of any conferences/ seminars I have had the privilege of listening to. Outstanding content & hope to see him again... (25)
Great mix of speakers with interesting contrast of topics
Rossi was very engaging with the audience and a pleasure to listen to. Loch and Van Cline gave very technical presentations. Schwass was outstanding, the best marquee speaker I have listened to. Fraser was engaging but wasn't sure what his agenda was. Sutherland topic was great but his delivery a bit dry. Power was very relevant a great find.
What speakers/topics would you like to see included/covered in future conference sessions?
More practicing greenkeepers speaking about their life/work experiences. (4)
General Managers or CEO of municipalities or educational facilities so there is understanding of what turf industry can supply with certain finances and what the community or board expect from turf managers.
More subjects concerning day to day operational problems & issues with suggestions on how best to resolve them.
A golf touring professional on course set up
Would be good to hear the latest in US and Australian experiences with managing new bent grasses. Dealing with pathogens in stormwater treatment methods. Practical methods and tools for monitoring turf and soil, hardness, EC pH , moisture etc
I thought the guy from Epar was very interesting last time I heard him speak and it would be great to get his views on the new carbon tax and what role the turf industry will play in the future.
Effects of grey water on turf and soils.
Do you have any further comments or suggestions?
I believe it is impossible to please everyone as far as providing interesting topics delivered by engaging speakers, however over the last 2 conferences I believe the standard has been very good and the overall theme approach (sustainability) works well. Personally I have gained enough from the conference to say it was worthwhile to attend every year.
Congratulations to all the organisers and newly appointed and continuing board members.
Have attended conferences since early 1980's - enjoy variety and alternative topics that are being offered these days. Thought longer plenary sessions resulted in less traffic in and out of the room which makes for better concentration

DELEGATE LIST

Of the 568 delegates in attendance;

Golf course superintendents and staff	347	or 61.1%
Sports field grounds managers	142	or 25.0%
Turf mechanics	47	or 8.3%
General Managers/Arch	32	or 5.6%

Full delegates list is attached.

KEY OUTCOMES

Lessons Learnt and Recommendations

1. Having keynote and speciality speakers that cover not only agronomic topics but also management and health issues was of interest to all delegates and proved to be popular and well received.
2. Conference survey results show that our delegates overwhelmingly prefer the traditional session format supported by interesting forums and a one off workshops.
3. Turfies love to hear what other turfies are doing and on what budget. It is important that we always roster local superintendents and turf managers into the timetable so we keep the content relevant for all spectrums of the turf maintenance industry
4. C Catering is still an important issue. Getting the balance right in regards to menu choice, whilst still offering value for money will always be a challenge given the limited menu options offered by venues.

Forward Planning

1. The balance between delivering talks on basic turf management practices and still keeping the sessions fresh and vibrant will remain a challenge.
2. New ideas and quality research presentations will need to be complimented with presentations by local and international turf managers so there is a good balance between theory and practice
3. There is a continued need for management and communications education sessions as well as up to date information on changing legislation.
